THE COUNCIL.

The Council, the governing body of the College, consists of twenty-four Members, three of whom, when no vacancy, either by resignation or death, has occurred during the year, go out in rotation annually in July, but are eligible for re-election by the Fellows of the College. All proceedings of the Court of Examiners, the Midwifery and Dental Boards, and the several Committees are reported to the Council for approval and confirmation. The Meetings of the Council are generally held in each month of the year, except in the month of September, and at such other times as the business of the College may require. During the past Collegiate Year there have been sixteen Meetings.

THE COURT OF EXAMINERS.

The Court of Examiners consists of ten Members elected by the Council from the Fellows of the College. The Court superintends the carrying out generally the regulations of the Council relating to the preliminary and professional education of Students, and conducts the professional examinations of Candidates for the Diplomas of Fellow and Member of the College, and of Assistant Surgeons in the Navy. During the past Collegiate Year the Court has held four Meetings for the Examinations for the Fellowship, and fifty Meetings for the Primary and Pass Examinations for the Membership. The following is a statement of the number of Candidates who presented themselves for the Fellowship and Membership respectively, with the results of the several Examinations, viz.:—

THE BOARD OF EXAMINERS IN MIDWIFERY.

The Board consists of four Members annually elected, viz. :—The Chairman, one of the Vice-Presidents of the College, and three other Members, who are required to be elected either from the Fellows or Members of the College, or from the Fellows or Licentiates of the Royal College of Physicians of London. The Board conducts the Examination of Candidates for the Licence in Midwifery. BOARD OF EXAMINERS IN DENTAL SURGERY.

The Board consists of six Members elected by the Council for five years, viz. :—three Members of the Court of Examiners of the College and three other persons skilled in Dental Surgery. The Board conducts the Examination of Candidates for the Diploma in Dental Surgery of the College. During the year six Candidates have been examined, of whom four passed to the satisfaction of the Board, and the remaining two were referred to their professional studies for six months.

THE MUSEUM.

The Hunterian Collection, which forms the basis, and still a large proportion, of the contents of the present Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, was originally arranged in a building which its Founder, John Hunter, erected for it in 1784, behind his house in Leicester Square.

John Hunter died October 16th, 1793, aged 64. By his will he directed his Museum to be offered in the first instance to the British Government, on such terms as might be considered reasonable, and in case of refusal, to be sold in one lot, either to some foreign state, or as his executors might think proper.

In the year 1799 Parliament voted the sum of £15,000 for the Museum, and an offer of it being made to the Corporation of Surgeons, it was accepted on the terms proposed by Government*.

In 1806 the sum of £15,000 was voted by Parliament in aid of the erection of an edifice for the display and arrangement of the Hunterian Collection; a second grant of £12,500 was subsequently voted, and upwards of £21,000 having been supplied from the funds of the College, the building was completed in Lincoln's-Inn Fields, in which the Museum was open for the inspection of visitors in the year 1813.

In consequence of the large number of additions, this building became too small for the adequate display and arrangement of its contents; and more space being at the same time required for the rapidly increasing Library, the greater portion of the present building was erected, wholly at the expense of the College, in 1835, at a cost of about £40,000, and the Hunterian and Collegiate Collections were re-

* The following are the Terms and Conditions on which the Hunterian Collection, purchased by Parliament, was delivered to the late Corporation of Surgeons; which Corporation having become dissolved, the Members thereof were re-incorporated by Charter, dated the 22nd day of March, 1800, under the Title of The Royal College of Surgeons in London:—

1st. The Collection shall be open Four Hours in the Forenoon of two days every week for Inspection and Consultation of the Fellows of the College of Physicians, the Members of the Company of Surgeons, and Persons properly introduced by them; a Catalogue of the Preparations, and a proper Person to explain it, being at those times always in the Room.

2nd. That one Course of Lectures, not less than twenty-four in number, on Comparative Anatomy and other subjects, illustrated by the Preparations, shall be given every year by some Member of the Company.

3rd. That the Preparations shall be kept in a state of Preservation, and the Collection in as perfect a state as possible, at the Expense of the Corporation of Surgeons, subject to the annual Inspection and Superintendence of the Trustees.

4th. That there shall be a Board of Trustees, to consist of sixteen (increased to seventeen by the Lords of the Treasury in 1856) Members, by virtue of their Public Offices, and of fourteen others, to be appointed, in the first instance, by the Lords of the Treasury, and afterwards to be elected, as Vacancies may happen, by a Majority of the remaining Trustees.

5th. That the Museum shall always be open for the Inspection of all or any of the said Trustees, who are to take care that the Corporation of Surgeons perform their Engagements respecting the said Collection. That a day be appointed for the annual Inspection of the Museum, by the Trustees acting collectively as a Board; and that they are also to have quarterly Meetings, for the transacting of any Business relative to the Museum, and for the filling up of such Vacancies as may happen in the number of the Trustees; and that the Corporation of Surgeons shall engage some Person to officiate as Secretary to the Board upon such occasions, and to issue previous Notices to the Members, in which he is to state particularly whether any Vacancies are to be filled up by new Elections.

arranged in what are now termed the Western and Middle Museums, which were opened for the inspection of visitors in 1836.

Further enlargement of the building having become necessary by the continued increase of the Collection, the College, in 1847, purchased the extensive premises of Mr. Alderman Copeland, in Portugal Street, for the sum of £16,000, and in 1852 proceeded to the erection of the Eastern Museum at the expense of £25,000, Parliament granting £15,000 in aid thereof. The re-arrangement of the specimens was completed, and the additional portion of the building opened to visitors, in 1855.

The Hunterian Collection was estimated to consist of 13,682 specimens, distributed under the following heads:—

Physiological Department, or Normal Structures.

Physiological preparations in spirit	3745
Osteological preparations	965
Dry do.	617
Zoological do.	1968
Fossils:—
Vertebrate	1215
Invertebrate	2202
Plants	292

Pathological Department, or Abnormal Structures.

Preparations in spirit	1,084
Dry preparations (including bones)	625
Calculi and concretions	536
Monsters and malformations	218

Microscopic Preparations 215

Of the additions by which the size and value of the Collection have been so very materially increased since it came into the possession of the College, very many have been at various times presented by Fellows and Members of the College, and other persons interested in scientific pursuits. Among the largest contributions from this source have been the Collection, consisting of 847 specimens, presented in 1811 by Sir William Blizard, and a valuable series of Pathological specimens presented in 1851 by Sir Stephen L. Hammick. At the same time the Council of the College have availed themselves of various opportunities as they have occurred to purchase specimens of interest, especially at the dispersion of private anatomical and pathological museums, as that of Sir A. Lever in 1806, of Mr. Joshua Brookes in 1828, of Mr. Heaviside in 1829, Mr. Langstaff in 1835, Mr. South in the same year, Mr. Howship and Mr. Taunton in 1841, Mr. Liston in 1842, Mr. Walker in 1843, and, deserving of especial mention on account of the great number and value of the specimens acquired, that of Sir Astley Cooper in 1843.

The Histological Collection, of which the 215 Hunterian specimens (prepared by Hewson) constitute the nucleus, was chiefly formed by the late Professor Quekett, with considerable additions by purchase from Dr. Tweedy J. Todd, Mr. Nasmyth, and Professor Lenhossek. It now contains upwards of 12,000 specimens, all arranged and catalogued so as to be readily available for reference.

The superintendence of the Museum is confided by the Council of the College to a Committee of its Members, which Committee has held thirteen meetings during the past year.

A summary of the progress made in the preservation, arrangement, and augmentation of the Collection will be found in the following Reports.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE CONSERVATOR TO THE MUSEUM COMMITTEE.

(Presented January 2nd, 1865.)

IN reviewing the progress of the Museum during the year 1864, the first subject to which I would request the attention of the Committee is the condition of the PATHOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT of the Collection.

The allusion made in the last Report to the necessity of more assistance from the profession than had hitherto been afforded, in adding new specimens to this series, has been productive of good results. In the year 1862 the number of morbid specimens sent as donations to the Museum was 11; in 1863 it amounted to 21; while in the present year it has increased to 62. The greater number of these, it must be observed, have been presented by members of the Council. It is to be hoped that the care bestowed upon these specimens in preparing them for a permanent place in the College collection will help to enlarge the circle of those scientific cultivators of surgical pathology, to whose liberality we must look for the augmentation of this important branch of the Museum.

During the present year the labels, containing the headings of all the subdivisions of the Catalogue, have been written and affixed to the shelves of the Upper Gallery of the Western Museum, in continuation of the system mentioned in the last Report. The whole of the specimens of the Pathological Series in the two galleries are therefore, as far as facility of reference is concerned, in as efficient a state as it seems possible to bring them, unless at some future time it may be thought desirable to carry out the plan so far as to add a descriptive label to each individual preparation. Although the utility of such a proceeding cannot be doubted, it will be attended with some difficulty on account of the complex nature of many of the specimens, and it had perhaps better be deferred until more urgent claims in the department of label-writing are disposed of.

A very important addition to the Pathological Series is the collection, consisting of 194 specimens, with 448 microscopic slides, illustrating the results of Injuries and Diseases of the Eye, prepared by Mr. Bader, when employed as one of the assistants in the Museum. Although the preparations were completed more than two years ago, it was useless to place them in the Museum until the Descriptive Catalogue was published. The draft of this work was supplied by Mr. Bader; but the preparation of the manuscript for the press, and revision of the proofs have occupied much time, both of the Committee and myself. The work, which forms a second supplementary volume to the Catalogue of the Pathological Series, was finally completed, and copies delivered to the members of the Council and the principal medical libraries, in the beginning of the present December. The specimens are now exhibited in part of the rail-cases put up last year in the Lower Gallery of the Western Museum. The microscopic slides are added to the general Histological collection, being arranged in their proper place in the Pathological department of that series.

It was reported last year that a rearrangement of the extensive collection of Calculi and Concretions was in progress in the new cases in the Lower Gallery of the Western Museum. This has been entirely completed as far as the old specimens are concerned. The whole of these, 1190 in number, have been placed in new or renovated trays, and the labels have all been re-written. The collection has also been carefully examined and compared with the Catalogue and all discrepancies noted. Numbers corresponding to those of the Catalogue have been painted upon the specimens, as well as on the labels attached to the trays, in all cases where this had not been previously done, comprising about one-third of the collection. In the analysis of the specimens added to the collection since the publication of the Catalogue, considerable progress has been made, although the completion of the work has been delayed by the indisposition of Mr. Taylor, to whom it was confided by the Council.

The condition of the HISTOLOGICAL COLLECTION, and the nature of the arrangement entered into with Dr. Murie for its rearrangement, were mentioned in the last Report. I am now enabled to announce that the work undertaken by Dr. Murie has been accomplished in a perfectly satisfactory manner in every respect. The whole of the collection has undergone a careful examination; those specimens which were quite useless, either from complete destruction, impossibility of identification, or other cause, have, after inspection by the Committee, been excluded from the series, and the remainder, numbering 12,149, have been cleaned or repaired, and every one ticketed, not only with the name of the object, but also with a number referring to the MS. list. Facility of reference to the collection has been greatly increased by labels placed on the front of each drawer, indicating the nature of its contents; and a complete list has been made out, containing the names of the whole of the specimens arranged in systematic order. It now only remains to frame suitable regulations under which the collection may be consulted by persons desirous of pursuing researches in this department of scientific study.

The following Table, showing the arrangement adopted and the number of specimens in each division, will give an idea of the nature and extent of this section of the Museum:—

A reference to the Minutes of the Museum Committee will show that, about ten years ago, in the rearrangement of the Museum at that time in progress, a large increase in the department of NORMAL HUMAN ANATOMY was contemplated. For various causes, this determination, the expediency of which is obvious to any one acquainted with the contents of the Museum, has never been acted upon. The list of additions made during the present year will, however, show that, as far as opportunities have permitted, we have endeavoured to supply the deficiency formerly complained of. Among the anatomical and physiological preparations preserved in spirit in the appended list, thirty-six are illustrative of human anatomy; but perhaps the most interesting and instructive additions are two skeletons prepared with great care to show the progress of development of the osseous structures, at the ages of fifteen months and nine years respectively. These preparations must only be looked upon as the commencement of a series, which, when complete, will be of great value, as affording ocular demonstration of a subject most interesting and important both to the scientific anatomist and to the practical surgeon.

In the collection of Crania of different races of mankind great additions have been made during the present year, chiefly through donations. Among the contributors to this department, Mr. Busk may be specially mentioned as having presented sixteen specimens from his own collection, and having also been the means of inducing several other gentlemen to follow his liberal example. I would take the present opportunity of suggesting to those who may have it in their power to help, the importance of bringing together in one grand collection, in an accessible place, such as is afforded by our Museum, the materials for thoroughly investigating the natural history of our species, at all events in its anatomical and physiological aspects. The Museum at present contains 433 crania, nearly all well authenticated; but, on account of the numerous individual peculiarities found in each race, the total number required to form a correct judgment upon the prevailing characteristics of the different groups must be considerably increased. Indeed, in such a series, a duplicate specimen can scarcely be said to exist. Close similarity in two or more skulls of a given race is as important a fact to demonstrate as the differences which may exist between them. Recent investigations have shown that other portions of the human skeleton, besides the cranium, merit more attention from collectors than they have hitherto received; for instance, it is much to be desired that a good collection of pelves of individuals of both sexes may be formed, especially of those aboriginal races, many of which are now fast disappearing from the earth.

The condition of the OSTEOLOGICAL COLLECTION has occupied much attention during the present as well as in the past year. The catalogued specimens have now all been compared with their descriptions, and many errors in the numbers painted on the bones have been rectified. Apart from certain deficiencies, a list of which was laid before the Committee on the 6th of May last, and entered in the Museum Report-book, the collection is generally in good order. Some of the older skeletons may require, as opportunity occurs, to be rearticulated or replaced; but the large majority are in excellent preservation.

A plan has been devised during the present year for making use of the large collection of skeletons, amounting to nearly five hundred, almost all more or less imperfect, now contained in boxes in the store-room in the basement of the College; where at present they are perfectly inaccessible for the purposes of reference or study.

Beautiful and instructive as articulated skeletons are for many purposes, they are ill adapted for the examination of some of the most important parts of the osseous system. The articular ends of the different bones of which they are composed, are necessarily hidden, and a rigid comparison of one bone with another is almost impossible. It is proposed, therefore, that a new osteological series should be formed, designed to show the principal modification of each individual element of the skeleton throughout the Vertebrate series, by placing the homologous bones of a number of different animals in juxtaposition. For convenience of comparison, the specimens are all to be placed in corresponding positions, mounted on separate stands, and to each will be attached a label bearing the name of the bone and of the animal to which it belongs. It is believed that, when this series is carried out on a sufficiently extensive scale, it will afford facilities to the student of comparative osteology never before equalled, and add greatly to the real value of the College Museum to working men of science.

The greater part of the materials for the formation of this series being already within the College walls, two things were necessary in order to accomplish the design. The first of these was an additional assistant in the osteological department, for the purpose of mounting the bones, without interfering with the ordinary work of the Museum. This the Council has liberally granted, for as long a time as the Committee find necessary. The second was to find space in the Museum in which the specimens might be exhibited. As it was considered absolutely necessary in the London atmosphere to keep them under glass, and as no room could be found in the present cases for such a series as is contemplated, a plan was drawn out for a set of new cases to be placed in the Eastern Museum. On the recommendation of the Committee, the Council, in November last, ordered one such case to be made for a pattern. This has now been completed, and is under trial as to its efficiency for the purpose for which it is intended. Although the general design has received the approval of the Committee, the experience derived from this specimen-case will probably suggest minor modifications, which may be adopted in carrying out the remainder of the plan.

The large skull of the Greenland Whale (Balæna mysticetus, Linn.), which formed part of Hunter's Collection, and which has for many years been lodged in one of the courtyards of the College, had been observed to suffer much from long-continued exposure to smoke, rain, frost, and other atmospheric influences. It was, moreover, although a most interesting specimen, not only on account of its great rarity and majestic size, but also as exhibiting the most remarkable modification of the cranial bones found in any mammal, rarely seen by visitors. It was therefore determined by the Committee, rather more than a year ago, that it ought to be removed into the Eastern Museum. During the present year this has been effected, at the expense of very considerable labour and time on the part of the articulator and his assistants. In the first place, the bones, saturated with smoke, required a great amount of washing; then all the partially decayed portions had to be impregnated with glue, and many parts which were injured or missing were restored. In modelling the lost parts advantage was taken of the arrival of the specimen to be mentioned in the next paragraph. Then the different segments into which the cranium had been divided were severally carried into the Museum, and the whole fitted together and placed in a position which, while occupying a comparatively small space of the area of the floor, displays to great advantage the anatomical peculiarities, both of the upper and the under surface of the gigantic cranium.

By a singular coincidence, soon after the removal of the skull of the Greenland Whale into the Museum was determined upon, an opportunity occurred of obtaining the complete skeleton of an individual of the same species. Perhaps there was no animal that could be named which was so desirable as an addition to the Museum. Although for a long period of years the Greenland or Northern Right-Whale has been destroyed in immense numbers by expeditions fitted out from the ports of this country, until the species is threatened with speedy extermination, and although its osteological characters offer most remarkable peculiarities, no skeleton had ever been brought to England. Our Museum offered a most appropriate locality for the reception of such a specimen. The anatomy of the Cetacea was a favourite study of the founder, John Hunter, as evidenced by his classical paper "On the Structure and Œconomy of Whales"* , and by the valuable collection he made of their remains. Moreover, the lofty and spacious apartments of the present building are peculiarly well fitted for the display of such large creatures, which, when suspended in the air, only occupy space that could not possibly be appropriated to any other objects.

The Council therefore determined upon the purchase of the skeleton, which was that of an adult female, about 50 feet long, taken at Holsteinsborg, in South Greenland, and transmitted thence to Copenhagen. It arrived from the latter city last May, and proved to be in a very perfect condition, possessing the whole of the vertebræ to the end of the tail, the hyoid and the rudimentary pelvic bones : wanting nothing in fact but three of the terminal phalanges. The bones, as is always the case in these large Cetaceans, contained much oil, but have so much improved in condition by the treatment they have received since they arrived at the College, that it is to be hoped that in the course of next year this magnificent specimen may be mounted in the Museum.

The skeleton of another species of Whale, the Lesser Fin-Whale (Balenoptera rostrata), the smallest of the true Whales, being, though nearly adult, only 25 feet long, has also been added to the Museum during the present year, under the following circumstances:—The animal was cast ashore at the village of Overstrand, near Cromer, in November 1860, upon the estate of Mr. J. H. Gurney, M.P. That gentleman had the carcase carefully buried, and afterwards offered to present the skeleton to the College if it were thought worth the trouble and expense of disinterring it and removing it to town. In March last, with the sanction of the Committee, I proceeded to the spot, accompanied by the articulator; and we succeeded in recovering the skeleton in excellent condition, and very nearly perfect. It has now been mounted in the Eastern Museum; and the baleen or whalebone of one side (which had been removed before the burial of the carcase, and preserved at Mr. Gurney's house) has been placed in its proper position in the jaw†.

Another great addition to this department of the Museum is the fine skeleton of a remarkably large Grampus (Orca gladiator, Gray). This specimen is not entirely new to the collection, as the skull has long been a catalogued (Hunterian) specimen; but the remainder of the bones were contained in one of the store-boxes in the basement.

The time taken by the articulation of the two large skeletons just named, the removal and restoration of the large skull of the Greenland Whale, and the preparation of the two young Human skeletons before mentioned, has been such that the list of additions in this department is not so long as that presented on the two previous occasions; but in the value of the specimens, and in the amount of work expended on them, I think I may safely say there is no falling off.

A very beautiful series of preparations has been added this year by purchase, illustrating the anatomy of the internal ear in Man and various vertebrate animals. They amount to 120 in number, and chiefly exhibit modifications of the bony labyrinth and the ossicula; but they also include some very delicate preparations of the membranous labyrinth in Man. They were prepared by Dr. Max Hübrich of Munich.

During the year the whole of the rooms on the basement floor have been thoroughly cleaned and whitewashed—a great improvement in a sanitary point of view; and one room in particular has undergone a great alteration. I refer to the “Fossil-room,” which was used partly as a depôt for duplicate and uncatalogued fossils and casts, and partly as a receptacle for general lumber. By placing shelves around the walls, we have been enabled to arrange the former in an accessible manner, and the latter has been removed to a more suitable locality. A fireplace, with oven and boiler, has been fixed, and gas has been laid on; so that it now forms a commodious workshop, at present used for the preparation of the series of separate bones.

A large proportion of the collection of Reptiles and Fish, preserved in spirit in the store-room in the upper story of the building, has been examined and named by Dr. Günther, of the British Museum, in return for which service the Council has presented to that institution such duplicate specimens as were thought desirable additions to its collection. Of the named specimens, 211 have been selected, mounted, and added to the Natural-History Collection in the upper gallery of the Middle Museum, their names being entered in the interleaved Catalogue.

The Report of the occurrences in the Museum during the present year would be incomplete without a mention of Mr. Weekes' statue of JOHN HUNTER, erected by public subscription, and placed last September at the southern end of the Western Museum. The introduction of this fine work of art has necessitated a rearrangement of the portion of the Museum it occupies. The Hunterian plaster cast of the Negro, by Sartini, has been removed to the entrance-lobby; and the human skeletons, including that of the giant O'Brien, formerly on pedestals, have been placed in the adjoining case. The whole of the wall-cases on the northern and western sides of the Museum have been rearranged, so as to give room for these additions to their contents, and to display to better advantage the collection of Human skeletons and crania.

It only remains now to speak of the preparations preserved in spirit, added during the year, mostly prepared either by or under the immediate superintendence of Dr. Pettigrew, Assistant in the Museum. In number these considerably exceed those of the past year. They include a series illustrating the structure and action of the valves of the heart and of the blood-vessels. As the value of these most instructive and beautifully prepared specimens must be much enhanced by an account of the special points they are intended to illustrate, and as some years will probably elapse before the portion of the Catalogue in which they will ultimately be contained can be published, it has been thought desirable to append to this Report a concise description of each of these preparations. Since their completion, Dr. Pettigrew has been engaged in making a series of preparations demonstrating the arrangement of the muscular fibres of the urinary bladder. The result is partially shown in the five specimens brought before the Committee to-day.

In conclusion, I have much pleasure in expressing my approbation of the manner in which the whole staff of the establishment, in their several capacities, have performed the duties entrusted to them. It appears to me to afford evidence of a general feeling of interest in the welfare of the Museum, and satisfaction in increasing its efficiency, which is the best guarantee for its future prosperity.

Description of a Series of Preparations specially made to illustrate the Relations, Structure, and Function of the Valves of the Vascular System*. By JAMES BELL PETTIGREW, M.D., Assistant in the Museum.

Preparation 18. Portion of the aorta, with one of the segments of the aortic semilunar valve, of a Fin-Whale (Physalus antiquorum, Gray†). Shows the orifice of one of the coronary arteries, and how the aorta is thickened between the valvular segments in a direction from above downwards, the thickest portion corresponding with the highest portion of the segment, or where the segments unite above. As the portion referred to projects in an inward direction, it assists in carrying the segments away from the sides of the vessel, and keeps the free margins of the segments where they unite above more or less in apposition. This arrangement prevents regurgitation occurring between the upper portions of the segments, where the segments are least developed. This preparation shows the complete absence of the corpus Arantii.

* Many of these Preparations are figured in a paper, which embodies the author's general views upon the subject, published in the 'Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh,' vol. xxiii. p. 761.

† The animal was an adult male, 60 feet long, taken in the Thames, near Gravesend 1859. The skeleton is now exhibited in the Rosherville Gardens.

19. Section carried through the aorta and through the centre of one of the segments of the semilunar valve of the same Whale. Shows the structure of the segment, and how the aorta becomes gradually thinner in a direction from above downwards in a line corresponding with the centre of the segment. It also shows how the aorta between the segments projects in an inward direction, and how the upper portion of the segment is by this arrangement carried away from the sides into the interior of the vessel. The fibrous ring which corresponds with the convex or attached border of the segment is seen in transverse section at its lower portion.
20. One of the segments of the aortic semilunar valve of the same Whale, with the aorta cut away. Shows the segment to consist of three parts, a delicate lunated marginal portion, having no corpus Arantii, a very strong central portion, and a portion which is intermediate in thickness. The last-named portion corresponds with the under part of the segment. Shows also the fibrous ring which corresponds with the convex or attached border of the segment, and which assists in carrying the segment away from the sides into the interior or axis of the vessel.
21. Anterior and larger segment of the mitral valve of the same Whale. Shows the tendency of the chordæ tendineæ to be inserted into the segment in sets of three—three going to either side of the mesial line, in a direction from above downwards, three into the marginal portions, and three into intermediate points between the margins and the mesial line, making eighteen insertions in all. It shows also that the chordæ tendineæ differ in length, strength, and direction, those inserted into the base on either side of the mesial line being longer, stronger, and more vertical than those of the same set inserted nearer the apex. The same remarks apply to those inserted into the margins and into intermediate points between the margins and the mesial line. The chordæ tendineæ inserted on either side of the mesial line are in addition longer and stronger and more vertical than those inserted between the mesial line and the margin, the marginal chordæ being the shortest, feeblest, and most oblique of all. The result of this arrangement is that every portion of the segment is equally under the control and domination of the actively contracting muscoli papillares with which the chordæ tendineæ are connected. The advantage gained by such a disposition of parts is well seen in Preparations 30 and 40, where the chordæ tendineæ, because of their varying length, strength, and direction, are shown to be tightened (Preparation 40) or relaxed (Preparation 30) equally, whatever the position of the segment. A similar arrangement prevails in the segments of the tricuspid valves.
22. Posterior and smaller segment of the same valve.
23. Mitral valve of the Horse, showing the two smaller accessory segments which occur between the two principal ones. Shows also how there is a disposition on the part of each musculus papillaris to bifurcate at its free extremity, each bifurcated extremity giving off in the more typical hearts six chordæ tendineæ, three of which are inserted, by nine brush-shaped expansions, into that half of the anterior segment which is nearest to them, the remaining three into the corresponding half of the posterior segment. (Vide Preparation 32, where the bifurcation of the muscoli papillares and the threefold disposition of the chordæ tendineæ is very marked.)
24. Bicuspid valve occurring in the right auriculo-ventricular opening of the heart of the Horse. This valve, like that described in Preparation 23 (viz. in the left auriculo-ventricular opening), consists of two larger or principal segments and two smaller accessory ones. Preparations 26 and 27 furnish two additional examples of bicuspid or mitral valves occurring in the right auriculo-ventricular opening of the Human heart; and I am of opinion that when a true tricuspid valve occupies the opening in question, the third large segment is to be traced to the unusual development of one of the accessory segments. (See Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, vol. xxiii. p. 789.)

25. Heart and lungs of a Child, injected with plaster of paris. Shows the shape of the heart and the relative position of its afferent and efferent vessels. It also shows the distribution of the pulmonary arteries and veins in the lungs, and how the coats of the pulmonary artery are thickened where the segments of the semilunar valve unite above; whereas they are thinned behind the more central portion of each segment—these portions corresponding with the sinuses of Valsalva.
26. Example of a bicuspid or mitral valve occurring in the right auriculo-ventricular opening of the Human heart. In this preparation the threefold distribution of the chordæ tendineæ is well seen, each set arising from a separate musculus papillaris.
27. Another example of the same.
28. Base of a Sheep's heart, exhibiting the bicuspid or mitral valve and an unusually perfect tricuspid one. In this preparation the semilunar valves of the pulmonary artery and aorta have been distended with plaster of paris to show the valves in action. Each segment, it will be observed, is folded upon itself, and presents a more or less conical form. The segments, on account of the shape assumed by them whilst in action, are wedged into each other. As the plaster, in consequence of the sinuses of Valsalva curving toward each other, is directed on each segment spirally, the segments are in addition twisted into each other. This twisting wedging movement, which has not hitherto been recognised, is developed in proportion to the amount of pressure exercised, and is the most simple and perfect that can be imagined. Preparation 35 shows the nature of the apposition between any two of the segments.
29. The semilunar and mitral valve of a Human heart. Shows how the segments of the semilunar valve, where they unite above, are carried away from the sides into the interior of the aorta by a fibrous structure which projects from the interior of the vessel. The fibrous structure referred to corresponds in position with the thickest part of the aortic wall; it assists in keeping the delicate margins of the segments, where scantiest, more or less in apposition. This preparation shows also how each musculus papillaris bifurcates or has a tendency to bifurcate, and how the chordæ tendineæ from each division go to different segments, the one set proceeding to the anterior or larger segment, the other to the posterior or smaller one.
30. Heart of a Sheep. Shows how the chordæ tendineæ vary in length, strength, and direction; and how the longest, strongest, and most vertical are inserted into the base of the segment on either side of the mesial line, those which are shorter, more feeble, and more oblique being inserted at points nearer the apex and margins. It also shows how the chordæ tendineæ are relaxed equally everywhere, and how the very delicate margins and apices of the segments could readily be forced together so as to form a dependent cone, the apex of which would be directed towards the apex of the left ventricle, as seen in Preparation 41.

31. Mitral valve of the Human heart. Shows the tendency of the muscoli papillares to bifurcate at their free extremities, and how each division gives off chordæ tendineæ to the half of that segment which is nearest to it. It also shows how the chordæ tendineæ are inserted into the segments in sets of three, and how the margins and apices of the segments are separated from each other by the space which is interposed between the origins of the two sets of chordæ tendineæ. This space (as will be shown presently) is annihilated, and the margins and apices of the segments opposed, by rotating or twisting the muscoli papillares in an opposite direction to each other, or as they contract naturally in the heart. Without this rotating of the muscoli papillares the space in question cannot be diminished even in the slightest degree.
32. Semilunar and mitral valve from the Human heart. Shows the segments of the semilunar valve in action, and how the chordæ tendineæ of the mitral valve proceed in sets of three from the two portions into which each musculus papillaris divides at its free extremity. The bifurcation of the muscoli papillares is in this instance complete.
33. Eustachian valve from the heart of a Zebra, one day old.
34. Casts of the Human pulmonary artery and aorta, and of the pulmonic and aortic valves, as they appear in action. Show how the sinuses of Valsalva curve towards each other, and how by this arrangement the blood is directed spirally along the mesial line of each segment, and the segments twisted into each other, as has been already explained. (Vide description of Preparation 28.)
35. Human semilunar valve in action, with one of the segments removed. Shows how the lunated free margins of each of the segments are projected against corresponding portions of the segments next to them to form perpendicular crescentic walls. These walls increase in extent in proportion to the amount of pressure exercised, from the fact of their being formed from globular surfaces which become flattened in direct ratio to the pressure. This, then, is a self-accommodating and very perfect arrangement, successive portions of the sides of the segments being called into requisition as the closure of the valve proceeds. (See description of Preparation 28.) A similar arrangement obtains in the venous valves. (See Preparations 48, 49, and 50.)
36. The Human pulmonary artery and aorta, distended with coloured plaster of paris, to represent the semilunar valves in action. Show the thinning of the walls of the vessels in those portions which correspond with the sinuses of Valsalva, and how each segment when in action is folded upon itself by the blood to form a cone, the three cones formed by the three segments being projected against each other in the axis of each vessel, and becoming more and more tightly wedged in proportion to the amount of reflux blood directed upon them. Three distinct movements, therefore, combine to render the closure of the semilunar valves perfect :—
 - 1st. The spiral movement seen in Preparation 28.
 - 2nd. The wedging movement seen in the present preparation ; and
 - 3rd. The rolling and flattening of the free margins and sides of the segments against each other, as seen in Preparation 35.

37. Cast of the ventricles of the Sheep's heart, with the parietes removed. Shows the mitral and tricuspid valves in action. These valves are closed in a manner greatly resembling that by which the semilunar ones are closed, i. e. each segment, when in action, is folded upon itself by the blood to form a cone, the cones being projected against and wedged into each other according to the amount of the pressure. The free margins and sides of the segments, moreover, roll upon and are flattened against each other as the closure proceeds, and form perpendicular crescentic walls. Lastly, the segments are wedged into each other by a distinctly spiral movement. The auriculo-ventricular valves differ from the semilunar ones in having two movements—an upward spiral movement, in which the segments are raised in the direction of the auricles until they are on a level with the auriculo-ventricular orifices, or project slightly above them; and a downward spiral movement, in which the segments are dragged down into the ventricular cavities to form dependent cones, the apices of which are directed towards the apices of the ventricles. (See Preparation 41.) In other words, the mitral and tricuspid, when in action, form moveable partitions, which rise and fall like the diaphragm during the respiratory efforts. These movements are owing to the spiral conical form of the musculi papillares (see Preparation 40), to the spiral conical shape of the ventricular cavities (see Preparation 40), and to the spiral direction of the fibres constituting the ventricular walls. The spiral upward movement is occasioned by the blood being forced at the commencement of the systole in two spiral streams, whose channels correspond with the two spiral hollows occurring between the anterior and posterior musculi papillares (see Preparation 40), and which force the segments in an upward spiral direction until they are wedged into each other on a level with the auriculo-ventricular orifices. The downward movement is occasioned by the contraction of the conical-shaped spiral musculi papillares, which, as the systole advances, drag the segments down into the ventricular cavities, and in this way diminish the ventricles towards the base. As the dependent cones formed by the mitral and tricuspid valves towards the termination of the contractile act are accurately adapted to the space which occurs between the free extremities of the musculi papillares and the auriculo-ventricular tendinous rings, and the musculi papillares twist into and embrace each other, the ventricular cavities are by this means completely obliterated.
38. Human heart, filled with coloured plaster of paris and placed upon its base, to show the shape assumed by the blood in the ventricular cavities, and how the right ventricle and its contained blood are spirally disposed with reference to the left, the ventricles and ventricular cavities when seen from above twisting into each other towards the apex. Shows also the shape and the relation of the auricles to the great vessels, and the relation of the latter to each other. Lastly, it shows that the spiral curves formed by the ventricular cavities are continuous with those formed by the great vessels—an arrangement calculated greatly to facilitate the onward progress of the blood. The continuity of curve referred to, is particularly well seen in the right ventricle and pulmonary artery.
39. Casts of the ventricular cavities and of the pulmonary artery and aorta of the heart of a young Zebra, giving the precise shape assumed by the blood in the ventricles and great vessels at the commencement of the systole.

Shows the mitral and tricuspid valves in the first stage of their action, and how at this stage of the closure, the blood, especially in the left ventricle, is arranged between the muscoli papillares in two spiral columns, which act upon the segments of the bicuspid valve in an upward spiral direction (see Preparations 40 and 43). It also shows how the two columns merge into each other towards the base, to form a third column, which is continuous with that occupying the aorta. That portion of the left ventricular cavity situated between the left ventricle and the aorta is conical in shape, and corresponds with the infundibulum of the right ventricle. In addition to its conical shape, it is provided with three conical grooves, which in the cast give conical prominences. These conical-shaped prominences are interesting, because their apices are directed between the segments of the semilunar valves, and assist in throwing the segments aside like folding-doors, and in causing them to fall back upon the sinuses of the Valsalva when the blood is projected from the ventricle. Finally, it shows how these portions of the segments, which correspond with their attached convex borders, do not fall back into the sinuses to the same extent as the other parts, from the fact of the portions referred to being supported by fibrous structures, which carry them away from the sides into the interior of the vessel (see Preparation 43). What has been said of the infundibuliform portion of the left ventricular cavity applies strictly to the corresponding portion of the right (see Preparation 42).

40. Cast of a Sheep's heart, showing the exact shape assumed by the blood in the auricles, ventricles, and great vessels during the diastole. In this, as in the two preceding preparations, the parietes of the auricles and ventricles and great vessels have been removed. This preparation is valuable as showing (particularly in the left ventricle) how the blood is arranged during the dilatation of the ventricles in spiral columns, between the conical-shaped spiral muscoli papillares, so that at the moment of contraction these fluid columns are made to advance in spiral waves upon the segments of the mitral valve in an upward spiral direction. It also shows how the chordæ tendinæ, whatever their length, strength, or direction, are equally tense in every condition of the valve. Lastly, it shows that the ventricles and great vessels are full of blood, or nearly so, at the same instant of time, and that the reflux blood in the latter, which is necessary to the closure of the semilunar valves, is not urged onwards until the contraction of the ventricles takes place. This arrangement ensures a certain degree of support to the semilunar valves when the pressure exerted upon them by the reflux blood is greatest. A similar support is afforded to the mitral and tricuspid valves during the systole, the blood which falls into the auricles being in the inverse of that which escapes from the ventricles. There is therefore, in both instances, an accommodating and compensating arrangement, by which retroversion and regurgitation are rendered all but impossible. The great mechanical value of such an arrangement can only be fully appreciated when the unerring regularity of the valvular apparatus and the heart's movements is taken into account.
41. Cast of the ventricles and great vessels of the Human heart, with the ventricles and parietes of the great vessels removed. Shows the shape assumed by the blood in the great vessels and ventricles at the commencement of the systole, and how the semilunar valves are closed while the mitral and tri-cuspid ones are in the act of being closed, by being floated up towards the auriculo-ventricular orifices. This preparation clearly proves that the margins and apices of the segments constituting the mitral and tricuspid valves are in apposition long before they are raised to the level of the auriculo-ventricular orifices, and that in fact they are in a condition to prevent regurgitation even when they form cones the apices of which are directed towards the apices of the ventricles, which is altogether, though erroneously, denied by some. The beauty and the value of such an arrangement consist in its accommodating character, the mitral and tricuspid valves being by this means enabled to act efficiently within certain areas as moveable partitions, which permit the blood in the auricles to descend into the ventricles when the latter are nearly empty, and vice versâ. By the blood in the auricles and ventricles mutually coordinating each other, the segments of the mitral and tricuspid valves, as has been explained, are supported when in action. The preparation under consideration shows how the ventricular cavities of the human heart are grooved, in a direction from right to left, upwards, how the blood acts upon the mitral and tricuspid valves spirally, and how, consequently, when the mitral and tricuspid valves are closed, the semilunar ones are raised or opened spirally, and the blood projected through the great vessels by a rotatory movement similar to that by which two Minié bullets would be thrown from a double-barrelled Minié rifle. The rotatory movement of the blood is facilitated by the sinuses of Valsalva, situated at the orifices of the pulmonary artery and aorta, inclining spirally towards each other, as has been already stated. (See description of Preparation 34.)

42. Cast of the right ventricle of the heart of the Horse, with the parietes of the ventricle removed. Shows the tricuspid valve in action, and the precise shape assumed by the blood in the ventricle, infundibulum, sinuses of Valsalva, and pulmonary artery at the commencement of the systole. In this preparation the semilunar valves are closed; but the blood in the infundibulum (represented by the plaster), which supports them from beneath and counteracts the tendency to eversion produced by the refluent blood in the pulmonary artery, is about to be thrown open, as it is impossible for the tricuspid and semilunar valves to be both closed at once. The semilunar and tricuspid valves therefore coordinate in the same manner as the blood in the auricles coordinates that in the ventricles.
43. Cast of the left ventricle of the heart of the Horse, with the parietes of the ventricle and the muscoli papillares removed. Shows the shape assumed by the blood in the ventricle towards the termination of the systole. In this preparation the mitral valve is closed, and the blood (represented by the plaster in the infundibuliform portion of the left ventricle) in the act of rushing through the aortic semilunar valve which is open. On examining the sinuses of Valsalva, it will be seen that a certain portion of the blood has collected within their cavities, so as to be ready the moment the ventricle ceases to contract, to close the semilunar valve. This preparation shows remarkably well the peculiar spiral twist of the left ventricular cavity, and how the blood, on account of the two muscoli papillares projecting into it, is arranged in two spiral columns, which, during the systole, act upon the segments of the mitral valve in such a way as to keep their apices and margins always in accurate apposition. In addition to the two columns, which are essential to the closing of the mitral valve, there is a third one which winds from the interior of the apex posteriorly and is continuous with the aorta. The third column is complete towards the base only during the systole, as it receives accessions from the other two when the mitral valve is closed.

44. Portion of the external jugular vein of the Horse, distended with coloured plaster of paris. Shows the position of two trisemilunar valves within the vein, and how the walls of the vein are dilated and thinned behind each of the segments in positions corresponding with the sinuses of Valsalva in the arteries. This dilating and thinning of the vessel behind each segment performs the same function in the veins as the sinuses of Valsalva in the arteries; i. e. it allows a certain proportion of the blood which is passing through the vessel to collect behind the segment, so that the moment it ceases to advance the valve is closed.
45. Portion of a Human femoral vein, distended with coloured plaster of paris, to show a bisemilunar valve in the act of closing. In this preparation the dilatations or pouches corresponding with the sinuses of Valsalva in the arteries are fully distended, and the segments of the valve driven inwards towards the mesial plane of the vessel, where, as will be explained presently, they form a perpendicular crescentic wall. This preparation shows the fibrous zones corresponding with the attached or convex borders of the segments, and the thinning of the vessel in those portions corresponding with the dilatations, in a marked degree.
46. Portion of the external jugular vein of the Horse, inverted and stained with carmine. Shows a venous valve, consisting of three and of four segments, and how, at the junction of the smaller veins with the main trunk, only one segment is present. It illustrates very well the peculiar crescentic shape of the segments, and how they unite above. It also gives the degree of curvature of the free and the attached borders.
47. Portion of the external jugular vein of the Horse, inverted and stained with carmine. Shows the same as the preceding preparation, the only difference being that the valves in this instance consist each of three segments. The presence of three and four segments in venous valves is unusual, except in the great veins of the larger animals. In Man the segments do not generally exceed two in number.
48. Portion of the external jugular vein of the Horse, distended with coloured plaster of paris, to show the venous valves in action. In this instance two valves are seen, an upper and a lower, each consisting of two segments. The upper valve occurs to the left of the preparation, and is situated at the junction of a large vein with the main trunk, the lower one on the course of the main trunk. In either case the two segments come together so accurately, that they form, by their union in the mesial plane of the vessel, a perpendicular crescentic wall. The wall referred to is seen in Preparation 50, and is formed by the flattening of the free margins and sides of the segments when in action against each other. As the segments roll upon each other in a direction from below upwards, the extent of flattening varies with the amount of the pressure applied by the reflux of the blood. This arrangement is such as to prevent even the slightest regurgitation. The nature of the apposition between the bisemilunar venous valves is in all respects analogous to that occurring between any two of the segments of the semilunar valves of the pulmonary artery and aorta. (See under Preparation 35.)

49. Portion of the external jugular vein of the Horse, stained with carmine and distended with plaster of paris, to show a bisemilunar valve in action. This preparation is remarkable, as showing the extreme accuracy with which the segments come together in the mesial plane of the vessel, as likewise the symmetrical nature of the dilatations or sinuses situated to the outside of the segments. It also shows the fibrous zones which correspond with the convex or attached borders of the segments, and are principally of use in carrying the segments away from the sides into the interior of the vessel.
50. Portion of a Human femoral vein, distended with coloured plaster of paris, with one of the segments of a bisemilunar venous valve in action, thrown out of position to show the nature of the apposition between it and its fellow. In this preparation the perpendicular crescentic wall formed by the flattening of the segments against each other is clearly seen. Compare with similar crescentic wall formed by the union of any two of the segments of the semilunar valve in the pulmonary artery. (See Preparation 35.)

REPORT OF THE CONSERVATOR TO THE MUSEUM COMMITTEE.

(Presented July 3rd, 1865.)

IN consequence of the Resolution of the Council of the College to publish the Conservator's Report on the condition and progress of the Museum in the Annual Calendar, these Reports, instead of embracing a period extending from January to December as hitherto, will in future extend from Midsummer to Midsummer—an alteration which will have the advantage of bringing them into correspondence with the financial and official year of the College.

In order to bring up the history of the occurrences in the Museum to the 25th of June of this year, the present Report, including a period of only six months, is submitted to the Committee. It can, however, scarcely be considered as an adequate representation of the amount of progress made during even this limited space of time, especially in the department of new preparations, as a considerable number upon which much work has been expended are not yet in a state sufficiently complete for exhibition.

The subjects which require special notice on the present occasion may be taken under the following heads.

I. PATHOLOGICAL COLLECTION.

Of preparations in spirit completed during the past half-year, and now submitted to the examination of the Committee, thirty-six belong to this department. They are all of considerable intrinsic interest, which, in conjunction with the manner in which they have been put up, under Dr. Pettigrew's superintendence, will render them valuable additions to the respective series to which they belong.

II. OSTEOLOGICAL COLLECTION.

Some important additions have been made to the series of Comparative Osteology. It was mentioned in the Report for the year 1863 that advantage was taken of the sale of M. Du Chaillu's collection to purchase some skeletons of the large African Apes. The preparation of these having been completed, they have now taken their place in the series of skeletons in the wall-cases in the Eastern Museum. They consist of an adult female Gorilla (Troglodytes gorilla), a young Gorilla, an adult male Chimpanzee (T. niger), a young Chimpanzee, all articulated, and an adult female Chimpanzee not articulated. These specimens, added to those already in the collection, form a very complete series, exhibiting the characteristic differences of age and sex in the several species of the great Anthropoid Apes.

Two other valuable additions have been made to the series of skeletons of the same order of animals, viz. the Red Howling Monkey (Myctes seniculus) and the Negro Monkey (Lagothrix Humboldtii) from South America, both prepared from animals which died in the Zoological Society's Gardens, and purchased from the Society. All the above are very fine skeletons; and the method in which they are articulated (the head, limbs, and portions of the trunk being easily removeable for the purpose of examination and comparison) is worthy of especial notice. Since their completion, the articulator (Mr. James Flower) has chiefly been employed upon the skeleton of the Greenland Whale.

I must mention here the very valuable and important additions to the Osteological series which have arrived during the present year, although there has not yet been time to prepare any part of them for their permanent place in the Museum. They consist of a collection of skeletons of animals of the order CETACEA from the seas around Tasmania, including an adult male Cachalot, or Sperm Whale; two specimens of a species of Globiocephalus, or "Blackfish;" and another (not complete) of the Killer, or Grampus; none of which have been sent to this country before. They were collected and prepared, at considerable trouble and expense, expressly for this Museum, by Mr. W. L. Crowther, M.R.C.S., whose former contributions to this department of the collection were specially noticed on a previous occasion.

In the last Report an account was given of the commencement of a new Osteological series, intended to exhibit the modifications of the homologous bones in various animals, by mounting them separately and placing them in juxtaposition. Considerable progress has been made in this, 750 bones, or (as in the hand and foot) groups of bones having been already set up and placed in the Museum. The handsome and convenient series of upright cases, eight in number, in which they are exhibited, were ordered by the Council, at a meeting held January 12th, of Mr. Sage, of Hatton Garden, and completed by the end of March at a total cost of £446 12s.

In order to bring the new cases into a better position as regards light and general appearance, the old floor-cases, to the backs of which they are attached, had to be turned round; and consequently the order of arrangement of all their contents, both of the glazed upper compartment and of the drawers, requires reversal. I have taken advantage of this necessity to commence a complete revision of the portion of the Collection contained in them. The interior of the upper part of the cases will be fresh painted and lined, the specimens cleaned, repaired when necessary, and re-arranged in a more convenient manner than hitherto.

III. HISTOLOGICAL COLLECTION.

The completion of the revision of the Histological Collection by Dr. Murie was mentioned in the last Report. Since the commencement of the present year the same gentleman has been employed by the Council in making a second improved copy of his MS. list of the specimens. The Microscopes and Apparatus connected therewith belonging to the College have been repaired and put in good working order; and the Committee have directed that the Collection shall be open to the inspection of Fellows and Members of the College, and visitors introduced by them, every Wednesday between the hours of Eleven and Five, under the superintendence of the Assistant in the Museum.

Sixteen plates, illustrating the structure of the dental tissues, intended for a third volume of the Descriptive and Illustrated Catalogue of this department of the Museum, uniform with the two volumes already published, were completed under the direction of the late Mr. Quekett. The preparation of the descriptive portion of the work is now in progress, having been confided by the Council to Mr. Tomes, one of the Board of Examiners in Dental Surgery.

IV. HELMINTHOLOGY.

The study of the mode of propagation, development, and migrations of parasitic animals has for the last few years received much attention from naturalists; and the time bestowed upon it has been amply compensated by the very remarkable results that have been obtained. These results are equally important, when viewed either in their bearing on abstract biological science, or in their more practical relation to the welfare, comfort, and health of the human race. A good exposition of the knowledge acquired by the modern study of Helminthology, as far as it can be shown by specimens of the various internal parasites which affect man and the principal domestic and other animals, in their different stages of development, was therefore considered an important desideratum in a Museum "designed to facilitate the study of the phenomena of life, both in health and disease."

In the already existing Collection of Natural-History Specimens preserved in spirit are many fine examples of Entozoa, mostly, however, requiring remounting and revision of their nomenclature. These have been taken as a basis for a new special collection; others have been added from various sources, as donations or in exchange. At the recommendation of the Museum Committee, the Council have secured the services of Dr. T. Spencer Cobbold, a gentleman well known for the great attention he has paid for many years to this branch of science, to remount, arrange, and form a catalogue of the specimens. As the work is still in progress, any donations to make the collection as perfect as possible for the purpose of reference will at the present time be very acceptable. Every parasitic animal which, under any circumstances, can affect the human body ought of course to be shown in all its phases of existence. With reference to the innumerable parasites of the lower animals, selection must be made: all the principal types should be represented; and those that infest the domestic animals deserve particular attention. If increased beyond these limits, the collection would become interesting only to the student of detailed systematic zoology, and therefore not a legitimate object for our Museum.

V. MISCELLANEOUS.

1. In order to give greater facilities to visitors, it has been determined by the Council (at the Meeting of March 9th), on the recommendation of the Museum Committee, that the Museum shall remain open on visiting days (Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday) from 12 to 5 o'clock during the summer months, instead of closing at 4 as hitherto.

2. Under the head of general repairs and alterations in the building, the only occurrences of any note are that the three work-rooms adjoining the Eastern Museum (the upper one of which contains the Histological Collection) and the staircase leading thereto have been fresh painted; and some additional gas-burners have been laid on in the upper work-rooms and in the staircase leading to them.

3. Some changes have taken place in the personal establishment of the Museum since the last Report. An old and valued servant of the College, George Searson, first Museum porter, has been compelled by ill health to retire upon a pension after thirty-three years' service. Although some temporary inconvenience was occasioned by this and other less important changes, the regular working of the establishment has suffered but little interruption.

I conclude, as usual, by appending a list of the preparations completed and ready to be placed in the Museum since the last Report.

THE LIBRARY.

The formation of a regular Library may be said to have commenced in the year 1801, at which time and in succeeding years presentations and bequests of books, often in considerable numbers, were made to the College; the principal donors being Dr. Baillie, Sir Everard Home, Sir Charles Blicke, the widow of Mr. Sharp, Sir Ludford Harvey, Dr. Fleming, Mr. Cotton, and Mr. Long. The Court of Assistants also directed from time to time the expenditure of small sums of money for the purchase of books, and eventually voted a sum of £100 per annum for this purpose. Sir Charles Blicke, in the year 1816, invested the sum of £300, the proceeds of which sum were to be devoted to the same object. Some of the purchases thus made were considerable, as in the cases of the Libraries of Mr. Pitt, Mr. St. Andre, and Sir Anthony Carlisle, and books of importance were added at the recommendation of the Conservator of the Museum and others. In this way a Library of considerable value was gradually accumulated, but it was only accessible to a limited number of persons. In 1827 active steps were taken to render it more generally useful, and with this object catalogues and extensive lists of desirable acquisitions were ordered to be prepared. Large sums of money were also expended during this and the ensuing two years, amounting in the aggregate to nearly £6000. A Librarian was appointed, and in 1828 the Library, then containing 10,500 volumes, was thrown open to members of the College, and all other persons engaged in the pursuit of natural science were freely admitted. This large collection thus opened, under very liberal regulations, offered great facilities to the studious. By means of extensive additions, the collection was well-nigh complete in works on Medicine and Surgery, both domestic and foreign, whilst it was also very rich in publications relating to the accessory sciences. The transactions of Academies and Societies, and the collection of periodical publications in general, owing to their completeness, and the difficulty with which access can be obtained to this class of literature elsewhere than in large libraries, formed a valuable feature. The maintenance of the Library from that time to the present has involved a very considerable expenditure of the funds of the College. It has been the object of those to whose care it has been confided to ensure the completeness and excellence of the collection, and great facilities of reference have been provided by the preparation of additional catalogues and indexes of subjects. At the present time the Library contains 30,675 volumes, comprising 12,939 works, and 34,057 tracts, pamphlets, and theses.

The following is a list of the donations presented to the Library during the year, viz. :—
